ABVET,

Marriage in High Life. The marriage of General Sherman daughter last Thursday to Lieut. Fitch, of the Navy, was marked as one of the most magnificent and anspicious weddings that has ever happened in this city or country. Auspicious because of the general good feeling and love of all classes of the people for the bride and groom, and respect and love for the noble mother and gallant father of the bride, attested by the crowds thronging the streets and the church, and the general enthusiasm in honor of the event.

It was the nearest approach to royal splendor and ostentation that has ever been attempted, and almost made us forget the simplicity of our early teachings, and to imagine that the ordinary matter-of-fact style of the Puritans was anything more than a myth. It was a wedding and a fit chapter to a fairy tale such as we have read of in our boyhood days, when the young and gallant knight, nerved by love and ambition, toiled to win the fair princess of his heart, and had it not been for the familiar faces we saw, under the gay plumage in which they were encased, the illusion would have been complete.

The marriage ceremony was performed by Archbishop Purcell of Cincinnati, assisted by Archbishop Bailey and a large number of the clergy from different parts of the country, who were dressed in all the magnificence and splendor suitable to their high position and the occasion-Archbishop Purcell being conspicuous by the gorgeousness of his robes, wearing gold cloth, real lace, silk stockings and sandals.

As the bride with her father entered the jority. church, a grand wedding march was played, until the bride was received by Lieut. Fitch at the altar. The Archbishop then made some extended remarks, referring very pleasantly to the President, who was present, to General Sherman, and others, after which he proceeded with the Mass and marriage ceremony. It would be impossible to give in the limited space of a letter more than a mere idea of the entire proceedings. As the Archbishop and married couple had not tasted food since the night before, having taken of the Sacrament, a breakfast was spread exclusively for the bridal party in the dining room of the Sherman mansion, which was profusely decorated with vines ference. and flowers. Here one gets a closer view of the bridal toilet, which is so elaborate as to deserve description. The bridal dress was made in Paris, and is of rich gros-grain, made in basque, high at the throat, with narrow ruff of the same, inside of which is one of plaited crepe-lisse, and fastened with a silk bow, in the center of which is a spray of orange flowers. Two folds of crepe-lisse, one above the other, finish the edge or skirt of the basque. The sleeves are close-fitting except at the wrist, where they are a little open, and are finished on the outside with a full plaited ruffle of gros-grain, inside of which there is one of crepe-lisse. The ruffle is finished above with bias folds of silk ornamented with fine satin piping, and a bow corresponding with that of the throat, flowers. The front width of the skirt is plain to the knee, where it is met by a boxplaited flounce over a quarter of a yard wide ; under this are two narrow flounces. edged with gros-grain and covered with ditends backwards from the front over three widths, where it joins a flounce a quarter of a yard wide, and bound like those above, and going entirely around the skirt. On each side are lapels of satin, edged with folds of crepe-lisse, which extend down from each side of the seams of the front width, giving to it an elegant finish, then sloping earth. back, rounded at the corners, where they meet under the ext. emity of the wide puffings of gros-grain that begin at the waist and end at the top of the flounce, where out on the long train, the center ornamented with orange flowers. The bride's veil was of tulle, and covered her entire person flowers, which, with the bridesmaids' bouquets, were ordered from Boston by Lieut.

There was in attendance every official connected with the Government, all the Foreign Legations, and a large number of members of Congress, of the press, clergy, private citizens and guests from abroad making in all nearly two thousand persons.

The reception was in keeping with the grandeur of the marriage ceremony, plenty to eat and drink, of the very best that the land could afford, and so managed that there was no confusion to mar the pleasure of the guests. General Sherman and his Lospitable lady, who to-day gave away in marriage their "first-born," have every reason to feel proud of the event, and the distinguished character of everything connected with it, and it can be said that they all have the good wishes of every person in the land; and while it may have been a little in advance of the simplicity of our institu- disagreeable taste in the mouth, coming up tions, all these things are excusable by the loving of the food after eating, low spirits &c. Mr. Ward is an able and popular representative in Congress, and while he don't make a great deal of noise over what he does, prefers to accomplish his work quietly and Montclair Railway in good working condido all the good he can. I recollect, during the last session of Congress, when there was a great deal of distress among the laboring classes here, who had been employed by Contractors on the Public Works, Gov. Ward was selected by a Committee of these laboring men, as being eminently the friend of the working man, to represent them and present their claims before Congress; and by judiciousness, he secured for them an appropriation in advance of the regular bills, which relieved and twenty freight cars. their wants. The different meetings of these poor men showed their individual approciation of Mr. Ward's efforts, for resolutions were passed and presented to him thanking him for his efforts

THE VICISSITUDES OF MINING. -It is bad enough for miners to be deluged with cold water; but to be drenched with the hot article is rather trying. This is what recently happened to the Gould & Curry people in California. A large body of hot water was struck in the 1,465 foot level of the Consolidated Virginia mine. From this level a drift extends into the Gould & Curry, with a downward slope, and the water runs into the latter mine. The Gould & Cur.y pump is a foot in diameter, and it requires its utmost capacity to control the water.
